

CDA Institute Ninth Annual Seminar, 1993

Canadian Forces in the Modern World

---

The World Canada Faces in the 1990's

Dr. J.L. Granatstein

"In the Western Hemisphere, no one could argue credibly that there are any threats to Canada of a military kind, not even if Brazil or Argentina develop nuclear weapons - a 0 in 10 chance of war in the next decade."

---

Peacekeeping: Into the Grey Zone

Major-General Lewis MacKenzie

"UNPROFOR now has 29 killed and 320 seriously injured, including a number of Canadians. What General Nambiar, an Indian General, and the outstanding boss that I had over there needs is not praise, which he is getting, but support; by way of command and control, finance and logistics."

How Should the Canadian Forces be Organized and Equipped for the Modern World?

Dr. Joel J. Sokolsky, RMC

"It is of little value to promulgate a wish list of equipment and capabilities, which might make perfect military sense, but which bear no relationship to existing political realities in the domestic arena."

---

The Impact of the Forces on the Community

Dr. Desmond Morton

"The community really is the most important element of defence policy in our country. The people let us know what we should be doing, or they prevent us from knowing what we should be doing."

---

Panel Discussion: The Impact of Society on the Forces

Jeffrey Simpson, Moderator

Kathryn Bindon, Sir Wilfred Grenfell College

Lieutenant-General Charles H. Belzile

Maxwell Yalden, Chief Commissioner, Canadian Human Rights Commission
